Pamela King Cable's Profile

Travels from Ohio, US

Pamela is the author of the highly acclaimed collection of short stories, Southern Fried Women. Born a coal miner's granddaughter and raised by a tribe of wild Pentecostals and storytellers, Pamela is an award-winning, multi-published author who loves to write about religion and spirituality with mystical twists she unearths from her family's history. As a young adult she was married to a megachurch ministry team member and attended years of megachurch services. She has taught at many writing conferences, and speaks to book clubs, women's groups, national and local civic organizations, and at churches across the country. More than a decade in the writing, Televenge is her debut novel. She lives in Ohio with her husband, Michael, and is working on her next novel.

Infused with inspiration and candor, Cable reveals the little-known chapters of her life as the wife of man who worked in full-time television ministry. Her tumultuous church experience, her inconsolable grief after her husband walked out, and the nightmarish life that followed will not soon be forgotten. Speaking in the sincere tone that has become her hallmark, she captures the evangelical experience in a new light, and sends it soaring. A proclaimed "woman of great faith," it is her religious experiences she reveals, that give her the edge in the fiction she writes. As audiences cling to their seats, Cable exposes the darkness in televangelism nobody hears about. The heartaches some believe and some refuse to believe. Heartaches countless have experienced. Heartaches many pray never happen to them. The ending brings audiences to their feet in standing ovations, as hope is revealed, and good--once again--triumphs over evil.

Coming Out Of The Dark And Into The Life Of A Writer

"When you've been told all hope is gone, when you've believe there's nothing left to live for, when you think you've sunk as far as you can go and there's no more light left in your tunnel, my message to you is ... there is life ... there is hope ... even after hitting bottom. I want you to know ... no matter your age or your circumstances, you can still come out of the dark and into the life that is calling your name."

Pam delivers her soul to her listeners in this heartrending presentation. A speech that has moved many to overcome insurmountable obstacles. This inspirational speech will move audiences like few others.

Testimonials:

"When a speaker genuinely enjoys what she is doing as much as Pamela King Cable obviously enjoys speaking, there isn't an audience in the world that isn't swept up in the experience. I've been to all sorts of workshops, forums, and readings, but I've yet to see a crowd as captivated as they are at every single one of Pam's presentations that I've attended. She literally becomes the words she has written and the characters she has created—it is a mesmerizing thing to behold."
